Clean out your art closet

Rails End Gallery is having an exhibition and sale called Art Heaven. The public art gallery, located in the old train station on York Street in Haliburton Village, is asking for donations of art and handcrafted items that once graced your home or cottage, but have been tucked away and forgotten.

It is never the end of the line for the fine art and handcrafted treasures that you have collected over the years. Too good for the recycle bin, they carry fond memories of studio tours past and carefree days at summer craft fairs. Now you can be assured that these lovely things will have an afterlife.

The art angels at Rails End will curate donated art items and offer them for sale to new owners at excellent prices. The sky's the limit! As a "fun"draiser and a "friend"raiser, for Rails End the angels promise to treat your art with the care it deserves and price it accordingly. Group of Seven originals, for example, will not end up on the toonie table.

Donations are now being accepted at Rails End Gallery during regular gallery hours. (Wednesday to Saturday, 11 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Sundays 11 a.m. to 3 p.m.)

The grand opening of the Art Heaven exhibition and sale will be held at Rails End Gallery from 3 to 8 p.m. on Friday, Nov. 20. The pearly gates will remain open until Dec. 19.

Rails End Gallery's motto is "bringing art to life in Haliburton." The Art Heaven exhibition and sale promises to breathe new life into art, and keep it in circulation for all eternity. Submitted

Wetlands and Waterways examines ecological threats

By Chad Ingram

For me, it's just an excuse to be outside," says Sheila Ziman of her art.

An environmentalist and founding member of the Haliburton Highlands Land Trust, Ziman is also a skilled weaver and her exhibit Wetlands and Waterways, now showing at Minden's Agnes Jamieson Gallery, forms a crossroad of those passions.

Ziman began as a traditional weaver of textiles, working on a loom.

"I just hated sitting inside at the loom," she says, explaining she took her first basket-weaving course at the Haliburton School of the Arts in 1989.

She would go on to become an instructor a decade later.

Basket-weaving would send Ziman into the great outdoors in search of materials.

"I got really interested in using natural materials," she says. "Learning how to snowshoe was great, because I could actually go out and walk on wetlands."

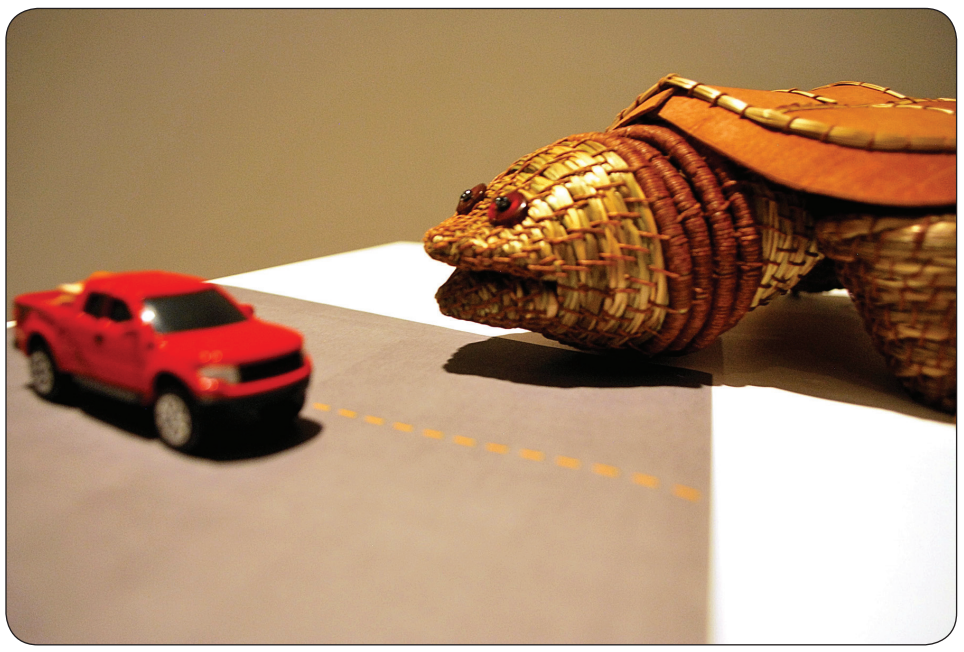
Ziman's work uses various types of flora and some fauna, too. Some pieces includes antlers, quills or deer vertebrate, for example.

The exhibit not only celebrates the wetlands of the Haliburton Highlands, with their bounty of biodiversity, but also includes subtle warnings about lurking threats to the important ecosystems.

"The more people enjoy and appreciate nature, they're more apt to protect it," Ziman says. "I also wanted to show some of the threats to our wetlands."

In the centre of the gallery's main room are three baskets atop tiered pedestals.

The first basket represents a healthy wetland, featuring a variety of plants, including phragmites, an invasive species that has been making itself more and more present in the Haliburton Highlands in recent years.



Turtles rule the world! tells an alternate tale of a turtle crossing the road. Artist Sheila Ziman is also an environmental activist, one of the founding members of the Haliburton Highlands Land Trust. CHAD INGRAM Staff

Blue tubing interwoven in the basket's ribbing represents the water table.

"The water level is a more healthy level," Ziman explains.

The second basket has more phragmites and a lower water level.

The third basket contains just phragmites, and a lower water level still.

"When phragmites moves in, it begins to affect the water table," Ziman says, emphasizing this of course has negative implications for other plants, as well as the creatures that make the wetlands their home.

Another piece, entitled Over the Rainbow, is a mobile of woven fish suspended from the ceiling.

Amongst the school is a smaller fish of silver and bright colours, representing the rainbow smelt.

"The rainbow smelt is an invasive species," Ziman says.

Another work, Turtles Rule the World!, features an alternative take on a turtle crossing the road, with a woven snapper looming over a toy truck.

Ziman implores would-be weavers who want to get into the art form to exercise great care if they intend to use materials from nature.

"If people are interested, they need to be careful and gather sustainably," she says. "All that material is food, shelter or habitat for creatures."

Wetland and Waterways is on display until Nov. 7.

Can your home age as gracefully as you?

Andria Cowan Molyneaux
Design Corner

It's sad but true, however diligent we may be, we will never be able to stop the steady march of time. We may try to slow its approach by way of exercise, expensive spa treatments, and healthy eating habits, but can our home help us to gracefully defy the aging process? The answer is yes, but it requires a better understanding of baby boomers, aging in place and universal design.

If you were born between 1947 and 1966, you would be classified as a baby boomer. In general terms, baby boomers are healthier than their parents, more active, have fewer children, are better educated, and are more likely to own their home. Reflecting upon this hard earned independence, the Canadian Mortgage And Housing Corporation (CMHC) considers you a prime candidate for aging in place.

Aging in place is a lifestyle choice. For some it means living in a cherished family home that they have happily lived in for many years. For others, it may mean downsizing and living in a home that is more manageable, allowing the owner to spend more time travelling or enjoying the freedom of retirement. As the term suggests, aging in place, means enabling the homeowner to live independently in their home.

In fact, according to the CMHC, approximately 85 per cent of Canadians over the age of 55 wish to remain in their present homes. Therefore, meeting the demands of this growing baby boomer population will require homeowners to think forward, and to adapt their homes so that they can live independently, and gracefully in their homes.

As a growing demographic, there are many reasons why baby boomers choose to live independently in their homes. You may be working beyond the age of retirement, and living in your home helps you to manage your income or debt. You may live in a pedestrian friendly community, which gives you convenient access to grocery stores, pharmacies, doctors and banks. Or, you may have family and friends that live near by. Whatever your reason is for aging in place, there is nothing more comforting than the familiarity of living in our your own home.

Living independently requires us to do something that we are not very good at, which is to plan for the future. Think of it this way: as a consumer we do not think twice about investing in health and beauty treatments, but do we invest the same time and money in planning for our future so that we can age gracefully in our own homes? The answer is no, and we have to change our mindset to successfully age in place.

According to the Government of Canada, the key to successful planning for the future lies in determining how we want to live tomorrow. To plan ahead, means to think about how we want to live, and what we need to do to achieve that lifestyle. An important aspect of planning for your independence lies in assessing your home to see if it will meet with your needs now and into the future. As we get older, we may experience changes in our health or mobility, and its smart planning to consider how you would like to live gracefully in your home.

Whether you're planning your home for the future, or considering a much-needed renovation, take the time needed to determine the design features that can help you to accommodate your aging in place needs. Depending on your particular situation, this may require you to incorporate design features that will help you to live independently, safely, and comfortably in your home. At the time of your renovation, these design features can be "roughed" into the project at a fraction of the cost of adding them at a later date.

For example if you're renovating a bathroom, the cost to add support blocks for future grab bars is negligible while the walls are down, compared to the significant cost and messy disruption of modifying the bath or shower in the future. This concept of forward thinking is called universal design, and a certified aging in place specialist (CAPS) is the appropriate professional to help you assess your needs in planning for your future.

According to the National Association of Home Builders (NAHB), universal design refers to an enlightened philosophy that is used to make products, homes and environments more accessible for all people regardless of age, or whether they are able bodied or not. In short, universal design makes life safer, easier and more convenient, and can be incorporated into your home without the need for costly adaptation or specialized design.

When planning your home for the future, some of the common universal design features could include enhanced door lever handles, rocker light switches, improved lighting, non-slip floor surfaces, wide doorways and hallways, and one story living to name a few. Most importantly, this type of design philosophy is unobtrusive, meaning that it does not interfere with your enjoyment of the home, and it many cases appears invisible to the owner or to visitors.

If your goal is to live safely, independently, and comfortably in your home, then consider the value added benefits of hiring a certified aging in place specialist. These professionals have the answers to your questions, and are uniquely familiar with the strategies and techniques for designing and building aesthetically pleasing, barrier-free living environments to help you grow old gracefully in your home.

Did You Know?

85 per cent of Canadians over 55 years old want to remain in their present home for as long as possible, even if their health changes

In 2006, Canadians aged 55 years and over made up about 25 per cent of the population

By 2036, it is estimated that 35 per cent of the population will be over 55

In 2006, there are 3.7 million adults aged 55-64

By 2036, it is estimated that there will be 5 million adults aged 55-64

By 2036, it is estimated that the number of seniors aged 65 and older will be equal to the current population of Alberta and Quebec combined

Family-friendly flu vaccine

This year's flu vaccine provides more choice and better protection for young children and teenagers, two selling features that local health officials are promoting to families Haliburton County.

A nasal spray flu vaccine is now available for children two to 17 years of age, as an alternative to the normal flu shot given with a needle. According to the Haliburton, Kawartha, Pine Ridge District Health Unit, the nasal spray flu vaccine may be a good alternative to the normal flu shot, especially for children between the ages of two and five years who may be fearful of needles.

"We want to make it as easy and convenient as possible for parents and caregivers to protect their children against the flu, and now they have more options," says Marianne Rock, manager of communicable disease control, epidemiology and evaluation with the HKPR District Health Unit. "Both the nasal spray flu vaccine and the regular flu shot available to children and teenagers work equally well, and this year, they provide broader protection against four flu viruses instead of just three."

The Ontario government is not providing the nasal spray flu vaccine to adults or seniors citizens this year, Rock adds. Instead, regular flu shots given by needles will be available for adults, providing protection against the three flu viruses most likely to circulate this flu season.

"When there is a good match between the flu vaccine and the circulating flu strains, people's risk of getting sick from influenza is greatly reduced," she says. "People who get the flu shot can still get sick from influenza, but if they do, it is usually milder than if they had not been vaccinated. "

There are many places in Haliburton County to get flu vaccine this fall and winter.

The health unit is holding a community flu vaccine clinic in Minden on Saturday, Nov. 21, from 1 to 2:45 p.m., at the Minden Community Centre (55 Parkside St.). People should bring their Ontario health card to this clinic.

In addition, five pharmacies in Minden and Haliburton Village have been approved by the Ontario Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care to provide flu vaccine for anyone over the age of five years. People can call their local pharmacy to see if flu vaccine is being provided, or visit www.hkpr.on.ca for a complete list of approved pharmacies.

Local residents should also check with their health care providers and Family Health Teams, as many of them are providing flu vaccines too.

The flu is a preventable, but serious respiratory illness caused by a virus. Each year, the flu is linked to 200,000 doctors' visits and 1,000 hospitalizations in Ontario.

Health unit launches website highlighting supports for families

The local health unit is encouraging parents and caregivers to use positive discipline with their children, rather than slapping, spanking or shaming them.

The Haliburton, Kawartha, Pine Ridge District Health Unit notes that physical and emotional punishment is not acceptable or effective, as it can harm a child and do lasting damage to family relationships. It can also negatively affect children, who may copy what they see their own parents doing and use the same behaviour on others. To support local families and encourage positive parenting, the health unit is highlighting its own programs and a new Children See Children Learn website.

The health unit provides a variety of free programs for parents and caregivers, including:

- Baby's Own Program is a six-week support and information group for parents of children up to a year old. The free program helps new parents to cope and adjust to life with a baby.
- Healthy Babies Healthy Children (HBHC) Program is a free, confidential and voluntary program for pregnant women, new mothers, and families with children up to age six. HBHC provides parents with advice, support and home visits immediately after a baby's birth, and at various stages thereafter to ensure children get the best start in life. Topics covered by HBHC can be as varied as feeding a baby, staying physically and emotionally healthy, dealing with occasional feelings of sadness, keeping baby safe and encouraging healthy growth and development in children.

Local residents can find out more about these parenting support programs by contacting their local health unit office, or calling toll-free at 1-866-888-4577. People can also phone the health unit to speak to a family health nurse about such topics as breastfeeding, infant care, healthy growth and development, and speech and language screening. Inquiries can also be emailed (info@hkpr.on.ca).

Created by the Best Start Resource Centre, the new Children See Children Learn website (www.ChildrenSeeChildrenLearn.ca) features short videos that explain how parents can guide their children in a positive way. Links to other parenting resources and programs are also listed.

Duck roll ups

By Steve Galea

This is a recipe that I frequently use on ducks but it also works great with pheasants, mourning doves, ruffed grouse and geese. Let's be honest, it's the bacon….

Ingredients:

- The breast meat of the duck(s), sliced lengthwise into half inch strips
- One strip of bacon per strip of duck
- Cream cheese
- One hot pepper per duck strip
- One skewer per duck strip

Method:

1. Lay the bacon on a cutting board, tasty side up. Lay the duck strip over the bacon. Place a dollop (that's a technical cooking term for as much you'd like) midway up the duck strip. Place a hot pepper in that cream cheese dollop. Roll it up and place a skewer through it.
2. Do this until all your duck strips are gone. Don't cheat and just roll up the bacon.
3. Place each roll up on foil on a barbecue set on high. Barbecue for about 15 minutes. The bacon should be cooked but not crisp when you remove it. If you mistake the bacon, duck, and skewer for a lump of charcoal, you've left it on too long. In that case, serve with large amounts of delivery pizza.

Going beyond journalism

By Jenn Watt

Many years ago, journalist Linden MacIntyre stood watching as the site of a massacre – a family home – in Lebanon was excavated. Boys in their early teens stood beside him, looking on as body parts were pulled from the rubble. Their faces "were like masks" as they observed family members brought out in pieces.

He wondered how this gruesome event would affect the teens. "This will rewire them and they will take this scene away from here and it will shape their lives and attitudes and the lives and attitudes of their kids and it'll go on down through [the generations]," MacIntyre recalls thinking.

It occurred to him that journalism would never be able to mine the depths of what happened that day. It could never cover what was going on inside these boys' minds and what consequences would follow.

"When I was covering conflict in places like Lebanon, for example, I realized I'm seeing things happening on various levels here. I'm only reporting on what I'm seeing, hearing and smelling and there's all sorts of other dimensions and levels to this and I just can't get into that," he said.

Fiction, on the other hand, offers the opportunity to explore issues with more care and space. It allows the mind to examine life beyond the basic facts that limit journalism.

So it was no surprise that in 1999, MacIntyre began shifting into fiction – writing about how one event can echo across not only one person's life, but those of generations to come.

"Two guys in war do something awful," he says, describing the plot for his first book, The Long Stretch. "They are twisted for the rest of their lives by it. ... Their children will grow up with particular attitudes and challenges that may very well be related to this one incident that the kids will never know about."

MacIntyre took three novels to map out the impact of one misdeed: The Long Stretch, The Bishop's Man and Why Men Lie.

The Bishop's Man won the Scotiabank Giller Prize in 2009.

If it weren't for his longtime employer, the CBC, and in particular The Fifth Estate, MacIntyre says he would likely have left journalism long ago. Besides the limitations of the craft, the financial support isn't there like it used to be.

MacIntyre used his departure from the corporation in 2014 to illustrate that point. On the heels of an announcement that CBC would shed some 700 jobs, the veteran broadcast journalist took his leave, making room for the new crop of workers.

He gave a lecture at the University of Toronto, which was published in several places online, where he spoke candidly about the state of journalism, the CBC and the cult of celebrity that emerges from chronic underfunding. In regards to the Jian Ghomeshi scandal, which unearthed a bevy of allegations of sexual assault and unwanted advances by CBC Radio's star host, MacIntyre said precarious work conditions deserve some of the blame.

"That was the whole thrust of my lecture was that in a time of great vulnerability for people working in a very vulnerable institution – an abused institution – people become, if you have an abusive personality among them, they're going to get abused. If it happens to be an abusive personality that tends toward sexual exploitation, it's going to happen," he said.

"If you're an intern hoping to translate your internship into a short-term temporary foot-in-the-door contract, you're not going to call the cops, you're not going to complain," he said.

Ghomeshi has pleaded not guilty to the allegations made against him, but MacIntyre says the situation has highlighted the inadequacies within the corporation, much of which is tied to its ever dwindling resources and management that bends to the will of the federal government.

"This is a problem with an institution that's in the middle of an existential crisis that's brought on by politics and brought on by the transformation of upper management (I mean, like head office and board of directors) into this crowd of people who are totally subservient to the government of Canada which happens to hate public broadcasting," he said.

MacIntyre doesn't miss journalism much, choosing to invest his energy in fiction. In 2014, he released Punishment, a novel following the life of retired corrections officer Tony Breau, who leaves Kingston to return to his childhood home of St. Ninian, N.S.

Upon arrival, he finds that a young girl in the community has died – the grandchild of his former sweetheart – and that an ex-con named Dwayne Strickland is being tried for her death.

Tony knows Dwayne not only from the corrections system, but also from growing up in the same community. Tony's life played out in a socially acceptable manner with marriage and a reliable job, while Dwayne got into trouble early on and was never able to escape it.

The mystery of the girl's death unfolds as Tony reintegrates into St. Ninian society, which brings with it a love story and revelations about human nature.

A Torontonian originally from Nova Scotia, who for many years has owned a place in the Haliburton Highlands, MacIntyre has experience in the small town setting and the tightly knit community that comes with it.

Add tragedy into the mix and it can create the perfect environment to discuss the universal pitfalls of human nature.

"Punishment comes at a time when people are quite acutely interested in vengeance and interested in crime and punishment and interested in justice. They're interested in what we do with people who do bad things," MacIntyre said.

Set in the early 2000s, the terrorist attack of 9-11 and the invasion of Iraq run parallel to the story. Characters discuss the world events that contain many of the same themes as the book: the power of fear, the human desire to assign blame, the notion that people can be wholly good or bad.

Our tendency to label people and seek to punish them rather than look deeper into their lives and society in general can lead us to dangerous places, he argues.

MacIntyre gives the example of Canadian Stanley Faulder who was executed by the state of Texas in 1999 for the murder of an elderly woman in a burglary gone for the murder of an elderly woman in a burglary gone very wrong. Faulder had suffered a brain injury as a child resulting in effects to cognitive functioning. MacIntyre spent many hours interviewing him right up to the day he died.

"It was one of the last human conversations he had," he said. "He was talking about life and death and remorse."

Had he avoided drugs and alcohol, Faulder speculated he may have never done his bad deeds. Learning from those lessons, rather than condemning Faulder as purely evil, would serve society better, MacIntyre said.

Those categories are futile anyway.

"Evil's only a moral quality that you attach to what people do, and to declare people to be bad is to exclude the possibility that they can also do good things – or to declare somebody to be good is to exclude the possibility that they do bad things," he said, noting that while Mother Teresa is considered to be one of the most saintly humans in recent memory, she also was known to be a difficult personality. It doesn't negate her good deeds, but she certainly wasn't purely good.

Convenient categories give us all a sense of security, he said, and helps us explain away actions of family or community members outside acceptable behaviour.

"When a bad thing happens in a community like Haliburton and in a family, people want to hear explanations that reassure them that what happened is not symptomatic of a bigger problem in the community," he said.

On Sunday, Nov. 8, MacIntyre will be the guest of this year's Friends of the Haliburton County Public Library gala at Pinestone Resort.

Doors open at 1 p.m. Tickets are $25 and can be purchased at Master's Bookstore in Haliburton, by contacting 705-457-2695 or emailing folhaliburtoncounty@gmail.com.

Handy deer hunting excuses

Living Large

Humour by Steve Galea

This week and the next, the gun season for deer is on. That means our local woods will be crawling with hundreds of hunters clad in blaze orange. Many will place their tag on a deer. The rest will need a good excuse.

Here are a few of my favourites:

1. Sure, I shot at it, but I was only trying to scare it to you – seven times.
2. Just my luck, I was squeezing the trigger right when the earth wobbled.
3. I didn't freeze. I just said to myself I won't settle for any buck with less than 14 points on each side.
4. I was testing my safety under field conditions. You know, it works perfectly.
5. That deer looked too heavy and I know we all have bad backs…
6. Buck fever? Don't be ridiculous. By the way, who else hears that kettle drum?
7. It's only a miss, if you believe I wasn't aiming at that tree.
8. Sure my rifle was unloaded. I wanted to give that buck a sporting chance.
9. I was in the process of answering nature's call. It's just a coincidence that occurred when those bucks woke me….
10. For some reason I never see deer after chili night…
